I think the readers of the Dispatch will agree that the enclosed lines exhibit more than ordinary poetic merit. A brief account of the sad event which was the occasion of their being written will not be

In the winter of 1874 my old friends Mr. and Mrs. — and daughter were boarders at a hotel in one of our large cities, in which they formerly resided. On a damp, foggy January Sabbath night the husband left his parlor to attend service at the church of the Rev. Dr. A-, his old pas-tor, the ladies remaining at home in consequence of the state of the weather. The porter testified that he opened the door of the hall and Mr. — passed out into the street. From that moment not one trace of my friend has appeared, though every effort which devoted affection of many friends could suggest or wealth adopt has been used for his recovery. It should be stated that about a week previous he had a severe fall on the ice, causing much pain in his head and continement to his room. The theory is that suddenly inflammation of the brain set in and was rapid in its effects. Rewards were offered, the police searched for him unceasingly for weeks, the insane asylums far and near were visited, the morgue daily examined, persons were watching the seacoast for a long period, and yet to this day the sad mystery is unsolved. The family are of high social position and culture and of marked Christian character. The long married life (forty years) of this excellent couple was a beautiful history of devoted and ever-increasing affection.

FARMVILE, VA., February 12, 1878. A strange thing for my heart to crave,
And yet the boon I covet most—
The presence of a new-made grave
To prove my treasure really lot.
For I could look above the sod For I could look above the sod
That lay above his pulseless breast.
And sing my gratitude to God
That he had surely reached his rest.
But no such shrine is granted me
Where grief her healing tears might shed;
Mine magnt but black ancertainty ther he liveth or is dead.

Out of the door-way of our home,
Out from its peace and love and light,
Into the spectral rain and gloom.
My husband stept into the night,
And since has never blest my sight,—
Tho' I have watched for him to come
Till fields are green which then were white.
I know he went not thus to stay,—
His heart so true was wholly mine.—
And had he meant but brief delay

And had he meant but brief delay
Word, lock, or touch had shown its sign.
But no farewell was given to me
As into murky night he stept,
Whose darkness; like death's mystery,
Hath close the fearing secret kept.

Vain all my patience, vain my tears,
Vain all my quest to find it out;
Gaining no answer to its prayers,
My heart is dying of its doubt!
If God would tell me he is dead.
And tell me nothing else beside,
I could lift up my weary head
And ask not subsen or head he died; And ask not when or how he died: But now my heart-strings suffer strain Beyond their mortal power to bear; For hope intensities my pain By trying to dissuade despair!

All day along the street I watch
Each gray-hair'd man that comes towards me,
All night I listen for the latch
To sound, and tell me it is he!
I turn my Bible's pages o'er,
I search in vain each well-worn leaf,
Comfort and pledge, so rich of yore,
Seem valueless to meet this grief.
And so a shadow worse than death
Veils all the beavens above my head.

Veils all the heavens above my head, Blinding the vision of my faith Till even Gos Himself seems dead! [For the Dispatch.] I'm loth to mart with this short day;
I'ove its light, unseen before;
For each diverging, visual ray,
I'll thank my God forevermore.

Within me is the cloistral shrine of care, and hope, and heart distress'd; They no'er, I trust, will intertwine With craving for an endless rest.

Remembrance rolls in me her wheel Memembrance rolls in me her wheel
Of countless spokes with guilt o'erspread;
Tho' sad its turning makes me feel,
I'd look upon its check with dread.
I pray it's the supreme behest
The soul shall ever be in flight:
And never doomed to eternal rest—
As deep a hell as eternal night.

Diphtheria. Editors Dispatch: The above subject will not be discussed in your valuable columns, but for your own pleasure I must say that, as a physician, I was glad you published your article on the treatment, and possibly, if you choose, you may disturb Medicus's equanimity by telling him something about the regular way of treating the disease in question. To be brief, the prescription published by you should be tried by persons who know the difference between gently inhaling a substance and in allowing a person to be strangled to death by it. No one was ever known to have died from a cause so simple as the inhalation of a little sulphurous vapor largely admixed with atmospheric air. No mother is going to hold her child in any such vapor when she sees that its respiration has been suspended. We all know that the carbonic oxide from burning charcoal is sure death if we breathe enough of it. Suicides are committed by starting a charcoal fire in the room and going to sleep; the breathers seldom wake again. The fact is I don't like to see so much snarling when a secular paper proposes to give the poor people a little peep into "medical mysteries." The people are not such fools after all; they are not going to kill their children by suffocation or strangulation, and even if they did, ask our medical friend if the rule with the medical preses-sion is not to "cut their throats" when they get their patients so that they can't bad habit then.
